Nutrient Extrusion Delivers Strong Benefits to the Horse

Encourages chewing and leads to increased saliva production, which is essential for buffering the stomach and to support healthy digestion.

Starches are gelatinized so they can be readily absorbed in the animal's small intestine as glucose., reducing the risk of carbohydrate overload and fermentation in the hind gut., which aids in reducing restless behaviors, as well as digestive upsets.

Oils from raw ingredients are released, making fat more available for absorption.

Allows for the addition of higher amounts of healthy oil to be added which provides a source of cool calories and energy for the horse.
